Working with the toolbox Photoshop comes with a toolbox. By default, it's displayed in the toolbar, but you can also access it from the Editor window or from the View menu and choose Edit ⇒ Toolbox, or press Ctrl+T. When the toolbox is open, use the following techniques to access commonly used tools: * Click an object on a canvas to display the object's properties. * Double-click a tool to activate it. * Click the pull-down menu to the right of the toolbar and choose an item from the menu. You can also right-click an object (or an area of an image) and choose one of the commands in the shortcut menu to perform a similar operation. A few of the more useful tools, shown in Figure 5-8, can be found on a shortcut menu that you access by right-clicking an object or its surrounding area. With a few exceptions, I leave out the shortcuts that toggle the visibility of some other options, such as the selection tool.

FIGURE 5-8: The shortcut menu makes your life much easier. The Tool Options bar appears automatically when you work in the Tool Options palette (which I describe next).

Re: How to Choose a Home Wireless Access Point Can anyone confirm the scenario I'm describing as the expected behavior for access points? We are testing various options here for the wireless router we are installing. After reading that access points have different antennas one option we are testing is that we put the access point in the outdoor locations you mention with only a short cable between the outdoor antenna and the outside wall where we will have the wireless router located. The other option we are looking at is putting the access points in the immediate indoor locations with a longer coaxial cable between the access point indoor antenna and the wireless router. Both locations will have a wireless access point in each location, with only the coaxial cable between the access point and the wireless router being the difference. If both access points are in the locations you describe, would one be more susceptible to RF interference than the other? Re: How to Choose a Home Wireless Access Point I've been using a 5Ghz band access point. It has been working great. I do not really use it for anything. Just Google it. You will find the answer to your question. Re: How to Choose a Home Wireless Access Point I know the WiFi2Point product is for example. I am not saying it is a bad product. It is a great product. I want to know what to look for. I have already bought their wireless router and the upstairs unit. Re: How to Choose a Home Wireless Access Point You can put one AP in the back bedroom and one in the living room. I will say this, if you need to add more APs later, do it with Ethernet (ADSL) or fiber. While you can put a "refreshable" AP on your Fiber or ADSL, it will only get a tiny amount of data and then it must wait to be "re-charged". Wifi-N APs can be refilled from a the Internet and do not have any "down time" like refreshing the ADSL or fiber. When an AP that is using Wifi
